Generators to Power Fuel Pumps At Many Gas Stations

A new law, requiring large gas stations near storm-evacuation routes and interstates to be pre-wired for backup power generators, became effective the first day of the 2007 Hurricane Season.

The Florida Legislature passed the law last year, after the devastating hurricane seasons of 2004 and 2005 left many gas stations with fuel, but no power to get it to pumps and consumers.

In South Florida, all gas stations with 16 fueling positions -- eight dispensers accessed from both sides -- must be wired so generators can power the pumps, cash registers, and critical equipment during outages.

The legislation requires only that gas stations be pre-wired for a generator, but does not mandate that all operations have a generator on-site. Only those gas station owners with 10 or more filling stations in a single county are required to have portable generators, in addition to the pre-wiring mandate.

To date, the gas stations listed on the following pages are in compliance with the new law.
